May 27th, 2020 — Alexandria major city and urban governorate in Egypt once among the greatest cities of the Mediterranean world and a center of Hellenic scholarship and science Alexandria was the capital of Egypt from its founding by Alexander the Great in 332 BCE until its surrender to Arab forces in 642 CE
The creation of the Library of Alexandria is widely regarded as one of the great achievements in the history of humankind—a giant endeavour to amass all known literature and scholarly texts in one place. It was a monumental effort to preserve knowledge and promote learning.

Alexandria was founded by Alexander the Great in 331 BC. The city was known for its intellectual and cultural significance. It was home to the Pharos, the great lighthouse, considered one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, and the Temple of Serapis, which was part of the legendary library at Alexandria, a symbol of learning and wisdom.

Recent research has shed light on the library's fate. If there is a story that forms the heart of New Atheist bad history, it's the tale of the great library of Alexandria and its destruction by a Christian mob. It is the central moral fable of the Draper-White thesis, where wise and rational Greeks and Romans store up all the wisdom of the pre-Christian ancient world in a single library, treasuring science and reason and bringing western tradition.

Libraries Before Alexandria presents the first comprehensive study of ancient libraries ranging over a broad chronology and geography assembles data that is either entirely new or which was previously scattered across isolated scholarly publications in many different locations.

May 17th, 2020 - Such an approach has been underutilized in the analysis of Egyptian folkloric traditions and has rarely been adopted in the past. A notable exception being Shukri's dissertation on the continuity and change of death rituals in Egypt 19.
